In operation since 1982, Autograf continues to evolve while retaining its original spirit. As one of the first schools to have specialized in creative communications, Autograf offered training in graphic design and multimedia before widening its scope to include other up-and-coming fields such as interior architecture and, more recently, video games. Autograf welcomes students fresh from secondary school for programs extending to the master’s level. It offers a preparatory year in the applied arts, as well as state diplomas (diplômes d’État), occupational titles certified and recognized by the French government (as published in the national registry of occupational certifications, RNCP), and European bachelor and international master’s degrees certify by the Fédération for Education in Europe (FEDE) and the IDELart-culture label. Autograf is expanding its international partnerships, particularly in China, in the form of Paris-Beijing exchanges. Autograf now offers an interior architecture program in Algiers. In addition to its many other international agreements, Autograf now also holds an ERASMUS university charter.
